

The word 'philosophy' originally meant curiosity, the desire for fresh experience, such as led Solon to travel and see the world (Herod. i:30), or the pursuit of intellectual culture, as in Pericles' speech: 'We cultivate the mind (philosophoumen) without loss of manliness' (Thuc. ii:40). This sense has to be excluded: the Rulers are not to be dilettanti or mere amateurs of the arts. They are to desire knowledge of the whole of truth and reality, and hence of the world of essential Forms, in contrast with the world of appearances.—Francis Macdonald Cornford, The Republic of Plato (Oxford University Press: 1941), p. 175.
